Mercruiser inboard oil leak (don't call the mechanic yet ...

Last spring we bought a 2003 Bayliner with a 4.3 Mercruiser engine. It's been a perfect family boat. At the end of last season, I found a minor oil leak from front of block when warmed up. I've cleaned everything, run it on earmuffs, and isolated the leak with a mirror. I'm pretty sure its the front crank seal as that seems like a common thing.

Oil can commonly leak from the oil pressure sender for the gauge, oil filter mount o-ring, tappet cover, valve cover, and the distributor mount. We do see quite a few engines with the timing gear cover corroded where it meets the oil pan.

Most common oil leak on 3.0 mercruiser? - JustAnswer

If it's under the oil filter then it's more than likely a front seal - I just had mine replaced as it was starting to leak more than I was comfortable with - Lucky with the Bayliner 3055 there is so much room in the engine room that the mechanic was able to remove the oil pans and front seal/timing chain covers without removing or disturbing the engines.

Oil Pan Leak. An oil pan is located at the bottom of the engine and is bolted to the block using many bolts and is sealed using a gasket. This oil pan is designed to collect oil into a centralized area allowing the oil pump to re-circulate it back into the engine. If the pan is damaged or if the gasket fails it can leak oil around the pan itself.

This is an oil drain hose. The fittings on these hoses tend to corrode and leak. Mercruiser has a service bulletin asking to remove that hose from the drain plug and securing it to the motor with the fitting above the oil pan. A couple other sources for an oil leak could be a rusted oil pan or a rusted timing cover.

Mercruiser Engine Oil Leak It wouldn't make any sense to find the 1 leaking seal, replace that 1 seals, pressure test the drive and then wait and see if another seal is failing. Because of that, if there is any kind of leak with a sterndrive, the best thing to do is to have the entire sterndrive resealed.

Remove the oil pressure sender and install a manual gauge. Pull the spark plugs and crank the engine, if you have less than 3 lbs at cranking speed, you have a problem with the oil pump. However, i suspect a problem with the sender or the gauge, because if you have run the engine at high revs with no oil pressure, it would have already failed.

Drain the bilge, clean up the oil. Then reach down under your engine and feel the oil pan. First the "quick/easy oil change" hose and drain plug fitting on my engine were leaking. I changed it back to a conventional drain plug. The next thing that happened was that the oil pan rusted out at 101 hours ! So feel the bottom of the pan.

Oil in Bilge - Boat Talk - Chaparral Boats Owners Club

Old school small block Chevy engines used four piece oil pan gaskets. Two sides and a front and rear gasket. Timing cover does not have to be removed to remove oil pan. As stated you should replace rear main seal since you are right there. Also consider replacing the oil pump for the same reason.

7.4 mpi Mercruiser oil leak? I have a 98 Formula 252 SS with a 7.4 mpi Mercruiser, Bravo 3 outdrive.....I bought the boat 3 years ago and have been restoring it slowly...I've been very good about properly winterizing the boat , even though the only water she has seen in this time has been on the trailer in my yard with garden hose attached....she runs perfectly.

7.4 mpi Mercruiser oil leak?

This one is hard to trouble shoot because the gear oil leaks around the shaft and then into the impeller housing where it mixes with the water, goes through the engine and out the exhaust. Since it is such a small leak, you will almost never find it. It will also not turn the oil milky since the bottom end is pressurized from the head of oil.
